

The decision by Sinclair Broadcasting to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation.

When large companies control the airwaves, political interests are able to buy unprecedented political power. What's worse, this power is invisible to the vast proportion of people who don't recognize that a station's choices have been bought and paid for.

Sinclair Broadcasting must be held accountable for violating the rules of the FCC and for violating the trust of the American public.
